This is a “model about models” – that is, a model that tells us what “piece parts” are available to build a specific (implementable) model and how we can put these pieces together. While this metamodel says a lot about the models that will be developed as part of this project, it is not necessary to fully understand the particulars of this metamodel in order to review and understand the models that are built using its guidance. Sohodojo Business Services is, however, always willing and interested in helping anyone to better understand what this model is, and how it shapes our approach to system design and development. In short, this model is supplied here for reference only, and to provide a “roadmap” of how we’ll proceed for the interested reader.
